

The famous Phoenix Wheel being assembled in May 1896 shortly after its arrival from Atlanta, Georgia.

throughout the evening will discourse enchanting music.

Above the pagoda near the center of the park the tall electric staff presents a constantly changing kaleidoscope of colors. There are 250 lamps on the shaft and they form 100 different combinations. This display ceases for a time, and from the tower at the end of the elevated dock, flashes an immense search light. It turns from shore to lake and from lake to shore and at every turn it brings to view some charming and oftentimes comical living picture.

Then the search light is shut off and we turn our attention to a pretty fountain that up to this time has exhibited no peculiar characteristics. Now, however, there is a change. The waters take on all the colors of the rainbow and assume a dozen fantastic shapes. Now they are yellow sheaves of wheat or oats, again they rise in pale green columns like giant stalks of celery and anon they become a whole flower garden, where many
