Many friends and fellow townsmen of Lucille Ball, former local resident, greeted with pleasure the news yesterday that the movie star was the mother of a son.

Lucille, and her husband Desi Arnaz, have skyrocketed to national fame and the birth of this child, thanks to the popularity of their television program. "I Love Lucy" has made the event one followed by millions all over the nation.

The child was born at exactly 8 A.M. yesterday morning (Pacific Time) and 12 hours later on television (eastern time) the child was "born in a television script that was "canned" week ago. The television baby also is a boy.

The son was born by Caesarian section and friends said the actress, who was conscious under spinal anaesthesia during the operation, kept asking, "What is it? What is it?"

Several times Dr. Harris, the attending physician, attempted to calm her by saying, "We must wait a minute, Honey."

Finally he announced: "It's a boy!"

The anxious father, waiting in the next room, beamed.

"We wanted a boy of our own and decided that if we couldn't have one, we'd have one on our television show anyway," he said. "But somehow I knew we'd have a real boy."

Soon after the first announcement of the million dollar blessed event, the hospital switchboard lighted up like a marquee. Scores of persons phoned in asking details about the arrival.
